Jijona itself is a pretty inland town that is famed for both its history and gastronomy. It's nestled in the most spectacular landscapes. If you love walking, you will adore the hiking routes here. One will take you up the peak of El Migjorn, a difficult route that will take you up some 800m. The effort will absolutely be worth it though as the vistas from here are breathtaking. As you amble along the streets of Jijona, you will be taken on a fascinating exploration of the legacy that the various civilisations that have lived here over the centuries have left behind. You will be immersed in the town's history and be able to taste the local gastronomy. A wonderful little town that is calling out
