THE AREA This place is BURSTING with culture, history and fascinating facts - all of which is available elsewhere online. Here's a brief history of one of Costa Blanca's main cities. The Torrevieja Salt Flats date back to before the 13th century and were an ancient royal possession. Until 1802 in Torrevieja there was only an old guard tower (which gives the place its place name) and some salt workers' houses. The Plaza de la Constitución But in 1803, King Charles IV decreed the transfer of the administration of the Reales Salinas from La Mata to the location of the current center of Torrevieja, and the construction of houses was authorized. In 1829, the town was completely destroyed by an earthquake and later rebuilt. The production and trade of salt determined and organized life here, converted into a city in 1931 by privilege granted by Alfonso XIII. Craft production was limited in the 19th century to the
