This is a house where history is alive. It is a typical Andalusian house, with its central courtyard, its gallery, its arches and columns. The columns date back to the 17th century and behind the walls are the remains of the wall of Carmona. Other details to highlight are the original tiles that can be found everywhere in the house, from the stairs to the walls. They are true jewels of art scattered throughout the house. From its terraces you can see the whole vega and in the distance you can see the city of Seville. Just to the right of the roof terrace is one of the towers of the wall, it is history that you can touch with your hands. In fact the playground of the children of the house in their childhood who would not have wished to have their own castle to play in.
