This fishing village grew as a prime holiday destination for wealthy Murcians who built their houses along the coast. Santiago has a very lovely promenade flanked by attractive palm trees. Today Santiago is still popular with the Spanish for their vacations but also attracts tourists from all over Europe and although it has a modern air, it has still maintained its fishing village atmosphere. Santiago de la Ribera has about 4 kilometres of fine sandy beaches which can be enjoyed by holiday makers and can get very busy during the hot summer months when both Spanish and International tourists arrive to enjoy the sunshine and the warm waters of the Mar Menor. Santiago de la Ribera looks across the Mar Menor to the narrow strip of land known as La Manga - a famous and exclusive sports resort.
