The concept behind the house, which was constructed in phases twenty years ago, has been to combine traditional Andalusian regional appearance, with Arabesque Mediterranean internal distribution and well insulated/ventilated modern construction in an abundantly shaded setting.

This achieves best use of the multi level site orientation, obtains sea, village hill views from the upper entry level used for the reception rooms and provides maximum shade sun protection for the lower level bedrooms grouped about a 'Patio Andaluz' or courtyard complete with a water fountain feature and flower bed. Both levels benefit from natural cross ventilation to take account of the sea breezes prevalent during the hot summer. The garden has areas of sun, shade and semi shade, suitable for all uses in all seasons.

Much use has been made in the finishes of materials in wood, stone Iron, traditional, to all styles of Mediterranean architecture. These include wall facing of local ironstone, use of
